ENGLISH COMPREHENSION

- Q.1-3 Read the following passage carefully and answer the questions given below it in the context of the passage. Certain words in the passage are printed in bold to help you locate them while answering some of the questions.

In this age, when the popular involvement in day-to-day matters is mounting, it is the electronic systems that offer us a potential service infrastructure which could, with careful programming, probably take care of a very large element of what we describe as mechanical, procedural governance without all the distortions, corruptions and harassments which constitute the daily misery of the average citizen. Of course, the electronic systems will only behave to the extent that they are properly programmed. But this is no impossible task today.

Once we move our minds beyond the mere use of the electronic revolution for business efficiency and higher profitabilities and apply it to the task of reducing the routine, repetitive activities of governance, we will conserve time and energy for more important and creative tasks. In other words, the electronic revolution can make for better and more effective handling of real everyday problems, additionally to providing the basic service of computerised information banks. Even in less developed conditions, the potential of the electronic network to take over a great deal of what is called bureaucratic "paper work" has been visibly demonstrated. Licensing system involving endless form filling in endless copies; tax matters which baffle millions of citizens, particularly those who have nothing to hide; election systems which require massive supervisory mobilisations or referendums based on miniscule "samples" which seldom reflect the reality at the social base. At all these points, the electronic advantage is seen and recognized. However, we must proceed further.

It is possible to foresee a situation where the citizen, with his personalised computer entry card, his "number", is able to enter the electronic network for a variety of needs now serviced by regiments of officials, high and low. Indeed, this is already happening in a number of countries. From simple needs, we will move to more complex servicing, and, ultimately, into creativity or what is called "artificial intelligence".

- Q. 1. The author's main objective in writing the passage seems to be to -----
(1) make a strong case for the electronic system      (2) defend the administrative structure
(3) visualise the future uses of electronic devices      (4) point out pitfalls in the administrative system
(5) describe plight of people due to faulty administration
- Q. 2. According to the passage, which of the following is the basic service provided by electronic systems ?
(1) Taking care of routine governance
(2) Providing store of information
(3) Reducing the repetitive activities in administration
(4) Increasing profit in business
(5) None of these
- Q. 3. What is meant by artificial intelligence in the passage ?
(1) Ability to think new ideas
(2) Intelligence of computer
(3) Intelligence of human brain
(4) Manmade intellectual capacity
(5) Information gathered through electronic devices
